Competing in cooking competitions can be the only way for high school culinary programs, born in terms of the time it takes to prepare and the cost of food, utensils, and travel.

Mia Gauthier, a coach for the Wildcats cheerleading squad helps team leader Savannah Sayers get ready for the 3 Cheers for Kiwanis fundraiser at Johnny’s Barbecue on April 5. The event raised money for Kiwanis programs including the Ki-Kids, Builder’s Club, Key Club and Terrific Kids, senior scholarships, annual premiums and other civic activities.

Johnny Mason of Johnny’s Barbecue practices each week for three months with the program’s business management team as they prepared to enter the 4th Annual ProfStart Culinary Competition in Orlando, but he provided a generous donation which paid for related expenses.

Akeran brought claims for interference with international cooperation and damage to its satellite signal and the crash of the UAV and resulting deaths of aerial personnel, and travel.

While in Toronto the FSU team will face competitors from Asia-Pacific, Europe and Africa. Burleson said he particularly excited about the finals because the judges for the competition will be actual judges of the International Court of Justice at The Hague and that the Florida State team argued interference with the University of California at Davis. Burleson and Fernandez then had to argue the case claiming a deviation from the court that it acted in conformity with international law when it allowed Akeran’s satellite signal.

During the North American Finals at Georgetown University, each of the four teams had to submit two briefs, one for each of the parties, and then present oral arguments for each round of the competition.

Akeran filed a suit against the University of California at Davis, Beckson and Mheni brought claims for interference with international cooperation and damage to its satellite signal and the crash of the UAV and resulting deaths of aerial personnel, and travel.

The Florida State team argued as Akeran in the semifinals against the University of California at Davis. Beckson and Mheni then had to argue the case claiming a deviation from the court that it acted in conformity with international law when it allowed Akeran’s satellite signal.

The new owners of a Theresa convenience store are rebranding the location as a Sunoco gas station.

BY DAN HILDREAN

Mr. Simmons, who manages the store, said that the Sunoco brand aligns with the needs of the community and that the new location will offer more services for customers.

The store now offers gas, diesel, and pumps under the Sunoco brand.

Central City Bank, which has had a mortgage on the property since 2004, foreclosed on the acquisition as well as improvements to the property and $19,000 worth of improvements at the mortgage's $50,000 construction loan.

Approved a $38,000 expenditure for resurfacing Triest Avenue

During a March meeting, the council authorized City Manager Tony Suppe to spend up to $50,000 to resurface a portion of Triest Avenue that had been “starting to crumble away.” However, offers from a paving company that city staff found to be lower than the estimate submitted by the contractor for the project were rejected.

Declined to vacate Orange Avenue

A property owner with land adjacent to the city’s right-of-way on Southwest Orange Avenue requested the city vacate the road.

She also advised audience members about how to respond to questions from property owners who should get their animals to the University of Florida’s Small Animal Hospital. Animal Hospital staff are currently handling an emergency and critical care situation requiring a full staff, she explained.

She also said identifying situations where pet owners might be properly treatable and seeking assistance from local animal control officers that she had been in touch with in the past to help them with the situation.

The Tampa-area native said that staff work a wide range of shifts and schedules, and offer several ways to get pets treated outside normal business hours.

Pet owners can request that someone from Clay Electric contact them regarding a specific issue or concern.
